ABSTRACT

The guide, part of an exemplary career education program, describes the Student Work Advisor Program (SWAP) which is designed to provide junior high school students with an exploratory work experience inside or outside the school setting. A two-page introduction explains the role of the program director, teachers, helping staff, volunteer sponsors from the community, employers, and parents in assisting students to explore the world of work. One-page presentations describe the responsibilities of the project director, the student helpers, the parents, the sponsors, and the employers. Suggestions for group guidance activities and procedures for selecting students are provided. Sample forms deal with: teacher's recommendation of student; individual student information, overall student performance, student evaluation, parent or guardian permission, cover letter for parent evaluation of SWAP program, parent evaluation, sponsor evaluation, employer evaluation of student helper, and employer's evaluation of SWAP. Five appendixes include: a student application for an interview with the program director, a job description for a student helper, a daily student log sheet for the library and main office work stations, and student helper duties. SWAP is an exemplary career education project at Central Junior High School in White Bear Lake, Minnesota, designed to provide junior high school students with an exploratory work experience inside or outside the school setting. A project director, teachers, helping staff, volunteer sponsors from the community, employers and parents corroborate with students in a SWAP-ing effort.

The program is aimed at any junior high school student who is interested in exploring the world of work. Ideally, the helping job chosen by the student should be related to an occupational interest, but whether it is related or not, is secondary to the benefits to be derived from involvement in the project.

The students serve as helpers within or outside the school setting. Each student has a volunteer sponsor drawn from school personnel or members of the community. Involvement in the program can be on a long or short term basis. The limit to the number of students that can become participants is contingent upon the number of available sponsors and helping positions. Student placement can be determined by needs within the school or community. How much school time can be used to participate in the program is based upon the individual student. It is recommended that each student help not more than an hour per day and not less than one hour per week.

Participation in SWAP gives students the opportunity to acquire good habits and attitudes toward work in a career oriented experience, to develop personally from the adult-sponsor relationships, and to develop sensitivity toward others in the setting of the world of work. This experience can also serve as a catalyst to greater participation in present academic undertakings and extend into later life/work situations.

SWAP can also be preventive in nature. Some youths demonstrate consistently an inability to get along in school as evidenced by their low academic level of performance, unacceptable behavior patterns, and poor attendance. The helping experience could enable a student to better accept school life. Some reward, monetary or otherwise is https://doi.org/10.1001/journal.org/ and poor attendance. The specific objectives of this program are summarized below:

To provide an awareness of self achievements as they relate to learning tasks, of self interest in roles played by individuals and complementary roles, of how group members influence his behavior and identification of personal values and of relationships between health and physical development.

To provide an awareness of self interests and aptitudes, of sensitivity to others, of ability to focus interests from immediate to long range, of the comparative nature of social roles and the beginning internalization of interest in particular roles.

To provide an awareness that a job well done is rewarded by self satisfaction and recognition from others and of types of recognition workers receive for performing occupational tasks.

To explore the importance of a job to self and others, towards recognition that fulfillment of responsibility for a job yields rewards, of tolerance for differences of others.

To explore the relationships between self and others resulting from job performance, involving others relying on him/her to complete accepted assignment, of the different values others hold and of individual differences providing opportunitites for personal growth.

To provide an awareness of relationships, achievement and interest to a wide variety of work settings; that work situations may require skills not possessed; of advantages of task selection and employability as sociated skill attitude of habit.

To provide an exploration of work interest and adjustment ability, of task preference related to directing and directed roles and by response to survey instruments and job openings appropriate to his ability level.

To explore work preference by application, interview simulations, or independent and group activity; and of social and communicative skills related to employability.

To provide an awareness of the importance of education and the relationship between in and out of school learning, of how school experiences become preparation for careers and of the correlation between school learned skills to those used by workers.

RESPONSIBILITIES OF THE PROJECT DIRECTOR

The Project Director is responsible for the entire operation of the program. He/she recruits students, sponsors, jobs, assembles and records final evaluations. The specific duties are:

- 1. Conduct a formal interview which is deemed important as the initial step in applying for a job.
 - a. Instruct the students in proper interviewing techniques.
 - b. Provide this experience for the student.
- 2. Initiate and plan an In-Service for the sponsors and employers concerning the philosophy of SWAP and implications in the overall educational program.
- 3. Notify each teacher of the potential student helper to determine his/her academic level of performance, classroom behavior, attendance and recommendations. Due to the fact that some students participating in the programs are specifically chosen for preventive reasons, a good overall recommendation may not be needed to determine helper placement. Ongoing improvement in overall school performance should be a basis, however, for continuance in the program.
- 4. Have an interview with each parent or guardian to explain the program.
- 5. Provide appropriate forms for students, sponsors, parents and employer. (Refer to index)
- 6. Get work permits/passes when needed.
- 7. Be available to sponsors, employers, parents, and students for consultaion.
- 8. Maintain records and assemble recommendation on academic level of performance on each student helper as to classroom behavior, attendance, and recommendation for the Student Helper Program.
- 9. Have a minimum of four group meetings with student helpers to explore their logs, ongoing reports from sponsors and look at the strengths and weaknesses of the program that are prevalent on an individual and group basis.
- 10. Present an evaluation report of this project to administration at the end of the first and second semester.
- 11. Have parents, sponsors, and students complete a written evaluation at the end of each semester and forward a summary to them.

SELECTING STUDENTS

Student selection for the program varies according to student, school/community needs and sponsor availability. There are always youth who, because of their skills and ideals, search for ways to extend themselves beyond the "walls of the classroom," who will volunteer for a helping station. An expressed desire to a counselor/supervisor to become a student helper, coupled with a satisfactory school performance is the set standard for some students. Other students who demonstrate consistently an inability to get along in school may be recommended for the program. A more succinct description of this type of student participant is mentioned on page 1. The principal, assistant principal, dean of students, counselor and faculty members or helping staff working directly with the individual student will decide, after the initial interview and work-up on the student, whether or not he/she will become involved in SWAP.
